The American Jewish Year Book, 5681, Vol. 22 2017-11-06 Harry Schneiderman Excerpt from The American Jewish Year Book, 5681, Vol. 22: September 13, 1920, to October 2, 1921 The past five issues of the Year Book were prepared during the World War, and the influences of the period were reflected in the contents of the issues from 5676 to 5680, not alone in the chronology but also in the articles. Last year's volume, especially, was devoted to essays on the participation of the Jews of various countries in the War. Although at the present moment, the various peoples of the European continent are in the throes of a most difficult readjustment, the effects of which upon our brethren are graphically set forth in the chronology in the present volume, the articles in this issue deal with matters of a normal and peace-time character. A view of the numerous agencies which have developed in our midst to serve general needs and special requirements in the community was given last year in the Directories of National and of Local Jewish organizations. In this volume we publish an article on the progress of Jewish social research in the United States, in which the author, Mr. Hyman Kaplan, Assistant Executive Director of the Bureau of Jewish Social Research, traces the history of attempts at co-ordination among these societies, and outlines the development of a central agency for the scientific study of social problems arising in the community, which has culminated in the organization of that Bureau. The brief account of the work already accomplished by that agency will be found of great interest by the thousands of American Jews who contribute to the support of our philanthropic institutions.
